Abstract: Ernest Untermann was born in Prussia in 1864. He studied geology and paleontology at the University of Berlin, but after graduation, the only work he could find was on several sailing vessels. He also served a brief stint in the German military, which fostered a desire within Untermann to abolish the "ruling class." He emigrated to the United States and became a U.S. citizen in 1893. He established himself as an editor for several Socialist publications, translator (he was the first to translate Karl Marx's Das Kapital) and author. He came to Milwaukee and worked as foreign affairs editor for Victor Berger's Socialist newspaper, The Milwaukee Leader, during World War I and from 1921 through 1929. After he left the Leader, Untermann served as director of Milwaukee's Washington Park Zoo. He eventually moved west where he focused on artistic endeavors. He was an accomplished painter of landscapes and prehistoric flora and fauna. Untermann died in Vernal, Utah, on January 5, 1956.

Scope and Content: The collection contains articles and a manuscript authored by Untermann, correspondence, newsletters and newspaper clippings regarding Untermann's Socialist activities, his views on world politics and the economy and his time as zoo director. Correspondents include Eugene Dietzgen, Dan Hoan, Ralph Korngold and William Bohn, editor of The New Leader.
