Milwaukee's first Normal School for higher education became operational September 14, 1885. The classroom building was built at 19th and Wells Ave. It was designed by one of Milwaukee's leading architects, Edward Townsend Mix, (architect of the Wisconsin Club) for $40,000. An addition was added in 1898 for $35,000. The University of Wisconsin Madison began accepting students from the Milwaukee Normal School if they had completed advanced courses. The city building inspector determined that the building was unsuitable for the number of students enrolled. In 1908 the Normal School relocated to Mitchell Hall on the East Side of Milwaukee. The Name later changed to the Milwaukee State Teachers College. In 1956 it merged with the Milwaukee Extension Division to become the University of Wisconsin Milwaukee, (UWM).

Milwaukee Girl's Trade and Technical School

In 1907 Wisconsin law allowed local public school systems to establish trade schools. With the support of Mrs. Simon Kander, (co-author of the Settlement Cookbook) and other Milwaukee School Board Members, the former Normal School building became The Milwaukee Girl's Trade School in 1909. It is said to be the first publically funded Trade School in the United States. The faculty was made up of eight teachers who taught dressmaking, millinery, and commercial education. The first class was 30 girls but enrollment grew to 87 by the end of the first year. Tuition for sewing class graduates was 50 cents a month but increased to $5.00 a month for girls over twenty years of age. August was the only time off besides legal holidays. During its early years the school was visited by President Teddy Roosevelt.

In 1924 the name of the school changed to the Milwaukee Girl's Trade and Technical School and became a fully accredited four year high school in 1926 but credits were not transferable until 1931. Two more additions were added in 1917 and 1932. Additional subjects were added to the curriculum, but the school did not emphasize college preparatory courses. The school reached its peak enrollment in the early forties with over 1,800 students. A new auditorium was built in 1948 and was named after Mrs. Simone Kader, (one of the school's founders).

Enrollment declined in the 1950s to less than four hundred. Admission for new graduates ended in 1952. Other vocational schools offered a more diverse curriculum and co-educational schools became more desirable. In June of 1955 The Milwaukee Girl's Trade and Technical School came to an end. A year later it became Well's Junior High School until 1978 when it closed. In 1983 the building was purchased from the Milwaukee Public Schools for $161,000 by the Milwaukee Rescue Mission located at 1023 N. 5th street. Today the building functions as rescue mission but also serves as a school for families in need.
