Abstract: The Milwaukee County School of Agriculture (MCSA) was one of Wisconsin's earliest technical education efforts. In 1912 Milwaukee County purchased 206 acres of land five miles west of downtown Milwaukee near the county grounds to establish the School of Agriculture and Domestic Economy. The county hired famed Milwaukee architect Alexander C. Eschweiler to design the main campus Neo-Gothic style facilities. Structures for the school include four class buildings, one administration building, a dormitory, power house, barn, greenhouses, poultry sheds, and other smaller buildings. Students were given hands-on technical training in areas of study specific to agriculture. The school experienced initial success with 243 students enrolling for the 1912-13 school year, but attendance steadily declined thereafter until 1928 when Milwaukee County closed the school due to its high operational costs.
