Abstract: Port Ulao was a small village along the Lake Michigan shore, situated five miles south of Port Washington in Ozaukee County. James Gifford, a politician from Illinois, established the community in 1847 to provide wood as fuel for lake ships, but the village's prospects declined swiftly and by the late 1850's, it was a ghost town.

Scope and Content: The collection consists of various secondary papers/publications about the village.
