Abstract: The Milwaukee Gas Light Company was established in 1852 to light the streets of Milwaukee. Soon after that, the company began offering domestic lighting services to the public as well. In 1904 the company built its West Side Gas Plant to support its growing services. Designed by architect Alexander Eschweiler, the Richardsonian Romanesque building housed retort furnaces to super-heat coal into gas that is then stored in gasometers and piped throughout the city overnight. When the need for manufactured gas ended in the 1950's the West Side Gas Plant was purchased by a trucking company, who removed all of the historic windows, and added a raised floor to aid in truck loading and unloading.

Scope and Content: The collection consists of historical notes/published histories, newsletters, miscellaneous publications, annual reports, cookbooks and other ephemera.

Notes: The collection was processed by Nick Neylon, Dec. 1992.
